Blind and partially sighted people may find access to DVDs difficult, as the audio description soundtrack has to be accessed from an on-screen menu. However, many DVD players have a function on the remote control that cycles through the different audio tracks available. This can be labelled as “audio”, “language” or as a row of three circles intersecting each other. Once a film is playing, this button can be used to work through the different audio tracks until the audio described track is located. Please note however, that this does not work on all DVD titles.

Please also note that DVDs are not available from RNIB.
